Head– National Cattle Comfort index is a joint effort between Oklahoma Mesonet, Oklahoma State University, and Kansas State University. The website provides updated maps and conditions for producers to determine animal stress relating to weather conditions. The maps show conditions for full sunlight, partial sunlight, overcast, wind speed, relative humidity, and air temperature. These maps help producers to determine the actual temperature based on multiple factors and if they need to adjust their husbandry practices for livestock approaching heat stress or colder weather. Management changes could involve increased water access, providing shade, only handling cattle during certain times of the day, adding additional windbreaks, increasing feed access where appropriate, etc.. Check out their website at cattlecomfort.mesonet.us/.

Heart– Read to the Children program is a coordinated effort between the Colorado State Library and the Colorado Department of Corrections. This program provides the opportunity for inmates to record themselves reading a children's book and then mailing that book and recording to their children. This program is providing the opportunity for incarcerated adults to continue connecting with their children. The reports indicate that inmates participating in the program increase their parenting and reading comprehension, which aids in their re-entry. Children also benefit by increasing their literary skills, adding stability, and maintaining more positive relationships with the parent. Check out this great program and learn more about how you can provide assistance.

Hands– Common Ground is a website that was developed and is sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association and the United Soybean Board. Their purpose in supporting the website is to provide consumers with information about food and how it is produced. They have ag advocates from multiple states that are directly connected to production agriculture. These individuals help provide a personal connection to consumers. Many of the advocates talk about specific topics consumers are concerned about as well as provide information about their own operations. The website offers factual information about food production as well as a way for consumers to directly engage with producers through blogs.

The website is a great reminder about knowing the facts about agriculture and how to connect others to factual information. Check out their website at findourcommonground.com.

Health– Protein is fundamental to increased health and development; especially for children. According to The Beef Checkoff a single three ounce serving of beef provides nearly fifty percent of the recommended intake of protein each day. Protein helps individuals to maintain a healthy weight because it helps you fill fuller. Protein helps with physical performance, supports growth, and the repair of body tissues. A healthy breakfast or an afternoon snack with protein can help provide a boost to your day and help you avoid unhealthy snacking. For more information, great tips and recipes go to beefitswhatsfordinner.com/proteinsbenefits.aspx.
